ces Canaux, il est propre à les y faire abor-der par l'autre. Car il ne y a que deux vents qui règnent dans cet endroit, savoir celui du Nord, et celui du Sud. Quand c'est le premier qui souffle, il ne peut rien venir de la Mer Blanche ou de la Propontide, parce qu'on n'y peut rien amener par le Bosphore de Thrace. Mais en même temps les vaisseaux qui viennent de la Mer Noire au Pont Euxin, et qui passent par le Bosphore de Thrace ont le vent favorable, et peuvent ainsi fournir la Ville de ce dont elle a besoin. Au contraire lors que c'est le vent du Sud qui règne, il ne peut rien venir du Pont Euxin, mais on peut tout amener de la Propontide, de sorte que ces deux vents peuvent avec raison être regardés comme les deux Clefes de Constantinople, puis qu'ils en ouvrent et qu'ils en ferment l'entrée aux vaisseaux.

La nature, sans qu'il fût nécessaire que l'art y ajoutât rien, a fait de cet endroit le plus beau Port du Monde, même pour les plus grands vaisseaux, qui y ont assez de fonds pour approcher à près de la Terre qu'il ne faut que jeter une planche pour y passer. Tout son circuit est du moins de six mille pas de longueur sur mille de largeur.

De Constantinople jusqu'à la Mer Noire le canal s'étend bien de la longueur de trois bonnes lieues. Son cours est fort tortu car ce qui est cause que de loin l'Europe et l'Asie semblent se toucher en divers endroits.

Autres grande de la Mer Noire on voit deux Châteaux l'un en Europe et l'autre en Asie, qu'on dit avoir été faits pour arrêter les Courtes et les brigandages des Cosaques.
Ils servent aussi de prison pour les personnes distinguées. Autrefois on tenoit une chaussée entre ces deux châteaux pour em-pêcher le passage dans les temps de troubles.

Quand on descend à terre dans cet endroit et qu'on s'éloigne du Canal, on porte aux yeux l'objet le plus agréable qu'on se puisse jamais imaginer, parce que comme tous ces lieux sont disposés en manière d'Amphithéâtre, on les voit tous d'un coup d'œil. Le mélange des Cyprés avec les frontispices des maisons qui sont peints de diverses couleurs, autant que les Dômes et les Minarets des Mosquées, a jettent encore considéra-ment à la beauté de cette vue. Mais pour dire aussi les choses comme elles sont, toute la beauté de Constantinople ne consiste qu'à la voir par dehors et de loin, car lors qu'on y est une fois entré, on y trouve très peu de belles choses, parce que les rues en sont fort sales et fort laides par la négligence des habitants.

Elles sont de plus la plupart étroites, tortues et irrégulières, dans un endroit elles sont hautes, et dans un autre elles sont basses, en un mot elles sont telles qu'on a de la peine à y marcher, et pour ce qui est des maisons des particuliers elles ne sont rien moins que belles, et ne sont la plupart bâties que de bois.

Environ à l'embouchure du Pont Euxin là où le passage est le plus étroit on rencontre une roche en façon d'île éloignée d'environ cinquante ou soixante pas des deux côtes de la terre ferme; on y peut monter jusqu'au haut, mais non sans grand danger, et l'on a encore plus de peine à en descendre. Il y avoit autrefois la une colonne de marbre blanc qu'on appelloit la COLOMNE DE POMPEE, parce que comme on le voit ordinairement, lors que l'empereur est vain-cu, l'édifice de la fit ériger en ce lieu pour monument de sa victoire. Elle n'avoit selon le monument de M. d'Arès qu'une hauteur de deux pieds. Son chapiteau est d'ordre Corinthien et il ne semble pas avoir été fait pour cet usage, mais plutôt pour servir d'étal à offrir des sacrifices. L'inscription qui est au pied étoit celle-ci.
